ANN YOUNG GRENADA

Ann Young was raised in Paisley, Scotland. She married Jim in 1965, and they moved to London, England where Jim worked for Air Canada. In 1967 they moved to Calgary, where Jim worked in travel related businesses and Ann worked as an employee of a large accounting firm. In 1993 they moved with their three children to Ontario so that Jim could attend Knox College. In Ontario, Ann was involved in office work which directed Community Care and worked as a teller at a Bank in Sutton.

Ann initially felt very challenged by the call to mission work in Grenada, and worried about moving so far from their three adult children. But she trusted God, and believes that she is where she is meant to be. She is currently teaching remedial English and mathematics at MacDonald Collge, a Christian Secondary School run by the Presbyterian Church of Grenada.

Ann writes, “The people we are working with have been so loving and caring toward us. I am most grateful for this opportunity to deepen my understanding of my relationship with Jesus Christ as well as to learn how others came about theirs.”

Ann’s husband, the Rev. Jim Young, ministers with the Rev. Osbert James at Belair Presbyterian Church, a small rural church. He also serves as Chaplain at MacDonald College.

Ann and Jim have three adult children, Danny who lives in Calgary, Douglas and his partner Melody and Jennifer and her partner Chris who all live in Ontario.
